TIMESHEET

YOUR NAME: ______________________________ STUDY GROUP _______

The usefulness of this form has been consistently demonstrated over many years: It is quite simply the best way for you keep track of (e.g.) (1) the time/effort you and your study group devote to 9.70, (2) the nature (substance/form) of your 9.70-related involvement (attending lectures, doing homework, going on field trips, watching films, reading assigned texts, writing and turning in assigned papers, meeting with the instructor or fellow classmates, attending study group meetings, participating in/observing some relevant value-laden activities -- as a member of a team, club, association, or living group, for example), and (3) the amount and quality of those and other 9.70-related learning experiences.

The point here is that, in this class, students must assume responsibility for monitoring the quantity and quality of their (your) own involvement in the learning process. If done conscientiously, this experience of active participation and “self-observation” will help you (and us) to formatively and summatively evaluate your own performance in this class.

HINTS: Among other things, use this timesheet to keep track of such things as: the amount and quality (or lack thereof) of your preparation for participation in class and study group meetings, the conscientiousness, promptness and duration of your attendance at and the quality of your participation in all officially required 9.68 activities; amounts and levels of quality in performance of tasks (e.g. “seriousness” of study: are you doing and understanding all the assigned readings? participating in group and classroom discussions? honestly endeavoring to enhance the quality of your own and others learning experience? attentively and critically viewing all the assigned films? How about the quality and timeliness of the reaction papers that you’ve written and turned in? Are you conscientiously keeping a journal? etc. etc. etc.
