IAP Film Series, January 2012: Five Émigré Directors and the Rise of Film Noir

SCREENING #6: Where the Sidewalk Ends (96 minutes)

Production Company  Twentieth Century Fox / Produced by Otto Preminger
US Release  7 July 1950 (New York)

Director  Otto Preminger: He was born in 1905, probably in a Ukrainian region of the Austro-Hungarian Empire, but possibly in Vienna; his family were middle-class Jews. His father became a leading prosecutor for the government, and the family relocated to Vienna in 1915. Otto studied law at the University of Vienna and got his degree in 1928; but by then he had begun a career in the theater, at first under the tutelage of Max Reinhardt. Starting as an actor (of moderate success), he moved into directing and also directed a few German-language films in the early 1930s. In 1935 he was invited by producer Joseph Schenck to come work at Fox in the USA, to which he agreed. Arriving in New York in 1936, he stopped off to direct a play, then went on to Hollywood. His work at Fox came to an abrupt halt in 1938, when he was fired by Zanuck while directing the “A-List” film Kidnapped. So he studied English and resumed a career directing plays in New York and elsewhere. He was called back to Fox in 1942, originally to act in various films. In 1944 he was hired by Zanuck to produce the controversial film version of Laura, eventually becoming its director. The success of this “scandalous” film noir led to his being hired to direct (and often to produce) 13 more films at Fox—the fine film Where the Sidewalk Ends being the next to last. At Fox and after, even if the stories of the films were often flawed, he was noted for being an abusive tyrant, though also for getting excellent results in acting, mise-en-scène, cinematography, and music. From 1952 he became an independent director, and many of the subsequent films continued to delve into what was was considered controversial subject matter—e.g., The Moon Is Blue (sex), Carmen Jones (race), The Court-Martial of Billy Mitchell (military incompetence), The Man with the Golden Arm (drug addiction), Porgy and Bess, Anatomy of a Murder (rape, wife-beating), Exodus (Zionism), Advise and Consent (the blacklist and homosexuality), and The Cardinal (church corruption). Throughout his career he showed liberal, anti-authoritarian sympathies. While most of the late films (e.g., Rosebud, 1975) were box-office disasters, some auteurist critics see signs of greatness in nearly all of his films. His autobiography, Preminger, was published in 1977. He died in New York in 1986.

Art Direction  J. Russell Spencer & Lyle Wheeler
Photography  Joseph LaShelle (Preminger’s favorite at Fox)
Editor  Louis R. Loeffler
Music  Cyril Mockridge (A skilled Fox regular; the main theme, though, is by Alfred Newman—it’s from his 1931 score for Street Scene—and there is very little music in the film overall.)
