Instructor: Prof. Pauline Maier

REQUIREMENTS:
(1) Class attendance and participation in discussions, which will focus upon the readings assigned for the week.
(2) A mid-term exam on March 17 and a second in-class exam on May 5.
(3) A research paper of about 12-15 pages in length. Papers should answer a carefully posed historical question and be based to a substantial extent upon research in primary sources, that is, documents that for most topics will be from the eighteenth century. The papers can focus upon any aspect of the Revolution, but must go beyond work done in class. All topics must be approved on or before Tuesday, April 5. The final papers must include footnotes or endnotes and a bibliography composed in a correct and comprehensible form, and are due on Thursday, May 13, the final day of classes.

ASSIGNED BOOKS:

READING SCHEDULE:

February 8-10. Background, continued, and Ideology.
(Note that Locke’s treatise is available at http://www.constitution.org/jl/2ndtreat.htm)

NOTE: It’s a good idea read the pamphlets in chronological order. How did the American argument shift between the two Hopkins pamphlets, and between Dulany and Dickinson? If you can identify where an author is saying what everyone is saying and focus instead on what's new, and on how the American position is developing (the British didn't change much), you'll be reading efficiently and intelligently. It might take some practice to get the hang of that. Be sure to take notes on each pamphlet immediately after finishing it or all of them will quickly melt together in your mind.

Feb. 22: Monday Schedule (no class).

Accounts of the Stamp Act uprisings, the Sons of Liberty, and the Virginia Association of 1770 in "Readings."

March 1-3. From Resistance to Revolution, 1770-1776; the Declaration of Independence.
For March 1: Jefferson, "Summary View" (1774), and Paine’s “Common Sense,” in Jensen, Tracts, 256-76, 400-446.

For the discussion on March 1, ask yourself what distinguishes the arguments of Wilson and Jefferson from Dickinson’s in the “Farmer’s Letters.” Is Paine’s Common Sense a logical outgrowth of the line of argument American pamphlets had taken, or something else altogether? How exactly did Paine justify Independence? Also, what developments between 1774 and 1776 help explain the changing character of the conflict “from resistance to revolution”? Do the local resolutions on independence help answer that question?

For March 3: The English Declaration of Rights (1689); an early draft of the Virginia Declaration of Rights (by George Mason) that appeared in the Pennsylvania Gazette, June 12, 1776; the Jefferson-committee draft of the Declaration of Independence with Congress’s editings, all in "Readings." The main focus of attention will be the draft Declaration with Congress’s editings. What did Congress do, and why? (You might also take a look at Morison’s version of the preamble to the Virginia constitution on p. 151 of Sources and Documents and see if you notice anything odd.)

March 3-8. Loyalism.
Joseph Galloway, “A Candid Examination of the Mutual Claims of Great Britain, And the Colonies” (1775), and James Chalmers, “Plain Truth” (1776), in Jensen, Tracts, 350-99, 447-88. (Galloway is more important than Chalmers, which you should flip through.)

March 15. The British View: Review.
Andrew Jackson O'Shaughnessy, “‘If Others Will Not Be Active, I Must Drive’: George III and the American Revolution,” Early American Studies, Vol. II (Spring 2004), 1-46, in “Readings.”

March 17. Midterm Exam.

March 22-24: Spring Vacation.

Shy, A People Numerous and Armed, chapters 4, 6, 7, and10, (roughly pages 81-115, 133-79, 213-44).
Wood, American Revolution, 74-88.

(Paper topics due by April 5!)

April 5-7. The First State Constitutions.
Morison, Sources and Documents, 148-56, 162-77, 206-08 (includes the Virginia Declaration of Rights, the first state constitutions of Virginia and Pennsylvania, both 1776, and the Virginia Statute of Religious Freedom of October 1785).
The New York constitution of 1777 and the Massachusetts constitution of 1780, available at:
http://www.nhinet.org/ccs/docs/ny-1777.htm
http://www.nhinet.org/ccs/docs/ma-1780.htm
John Adams, “Thoughts on Government” (1776), available at:
http://press-pubs.uchicago.edu/founders/documents/v1ch4s5.html

April 12-14. Government under the Articles of Confederation; the 1780s.
Wood, American Revolution, 70-74, 91-150.
Morison, Sources and Documents, 178-86, 203-06, 208-33. (If you don’t read French, don’t worry. When Morison published the book in the 1920s, he probably assumed all educated people could read French!)

(Scroll down to the part where Jefferson discusses what he proposes to do with Virginia’s slave population, and why it couldn’t just stay in Virginia.)

James Madison’s "Vices of the System," in "Readings."

Start Madison’s Notes.

April 19. Patriots’ Day, recalling the Battles at Lexington and Concord; Holiday

April 21, 26. The Philadelphia Convention of 1787 and the Constitution.

Begin by reading the “Guide to Reading Madison’s “Notes” on the course website. Then read Madison's preface, and pp. 21-166. This includes the convention's opening; presentation of the Virginia plan and the convention’s discussion of its provisions as a committee of the whole; the presentation and rejection of the alternative New Jersey plan; the resolutions the committee of the whole reported on June 19 (see them on pp. 148-51. Those resolutions are key to the debates thereafter, when the delegates’ discussion of them as a convention. Skim the make-or-break debates on resolutions 7 and 8 that runs from pp. 220-98, with the little additional flare-up on 299-302. Thereafter, debates proceeded with less fireworks, and you can pick and choose which issues to follow. (Debates over the presidency, which many said was the hardest issue the convention faced, are on pp. 306-14, 322-35, 356-72.) But why was representation such a make-or-break issue? Does that make sense to you?

As a result of these discussions, the convention produced a revised set of resolutions (pp. 379-85), which a Committee of Detail made into a draft constitution while the convention adjourned from July 26-August 6 (see pp. 385-96). When the delegates returned, they debated the draft, revisiting issues it had discussed before in the light of other decisions. Note the discussions of slavery and the slave trade on pp. 409-13, 502-08. In late August the convention set up a Committee of Eleven to propose solutions to several problems it hadn't solved. The committee's recommendations opened another round of debates, especially on the executive (see 573-79, 582-97, and 605-66 on impeachment). Finally, on September 12, a Committee of Style charged with incorporating agreed-upon changes into the draft constitution and refining its wording presented its report (616-27). That led to still more debates, in the course of which George Mason raised the issue of a bill of rights (630). Read also the record of the convention's closing days, 650-59.

Morison, Sources and Documents, 305-62, which includes a selection from the Virginia ratifying convention debates.

Letters from the ‘Federal Farmer’ to ‘The Republican,’ Nos. 3, 5, available at http://oll.libertyfund.org/?option=com_staticxt&staticfile=show.php%3Ftitle=690 (Note: this site identifies the author of the “Federal Farmer” as Richard Henry Lee, which is probably incorrect. It remains uncertain who wrote the series.)

Amendments to the constitution proposed by the Massachusetts Ratifying convention (February 6, 1788), South Carolina (May 23, 1788), Virginia (June 27, 1788), and New York’s “Instrument of Ratification” (July 26, 1788), in Helen Veit, ed., Creating the Bill of Rights (Baltimore, 1991), 14-28, and in "Readings." Are these sets of demands impossibly different? Are there any notable common elements?

May 5. Exam.

May 10-12. Conclusion: The Impact of the Revolution

Abraham Lincoln, Speech at Springfield, Ill., June 26, 1857. (How does Lincoln’s understanding of the Declaration and its meaning for the future differ from that in the Armitage essay?)

James Madison’s proposal for a federal Bill of Rights as presented to the House of Representatives on June 8, 1789, and the set of amendments Congress finally sent to the states for ratification in September 1789, in “Readings.”

Selections from the Adams correspondence and the writings of Judith Sargent Murray, in “Readings.”
