1. Play the aggressive strategy right back.

2. Ignore the aggressive strategy. Lead a change in the game by proposing objective criteria and principles that should be considered.

3. Ignore the aggressive strategy. Lead a change in the game by concentrating first on the interests of the Other and then on your interests.

4. “Name” the aggressive strategy of the Other and try to negotiate a change in the game by generating options, and concentrating on objective criteria and interest of all parties.

5. Propose a change in negotiators.

6. Go to your fallback position (your BATNA).

7. Go to your “micro-BATNA”.
